Netflix • Stranger Things season three will premiere on the 4th of July. • The highly-anticipated third season of the Netflix series will deal with new relationships and a new monster. • Season three will hit Netflix at 12:01 a.m. PST.It's finally here: The highly-anticipated third season of Stranger Things is coming out tomorrow, July 4th, on Netflix. In preparation for season three, fans have been speculating about who will live or die, buying as much merch as possible, and talking about how much of a legend Steve Harrington is.And while Stranger Things fans have been counting down the days until the season three release, they still have one question: What exact time should we get ready to binge all eight episodes at once? What time does Stranger Things 3 come out?Netflix HQ is based on the West Coast, so Stranger Things 3 will come out at 12:01 a.m. PST, according to Inverse. So if you're lucky enough to be on Pacific Time, you can start your binge right at midnight. If you live on the East Coast, season three will come out at 3:01 a.m. EST. Time to set that alarm. (Or better yet, stay up until the release catching up on season two to get reacquainted with your favorite characters and where we left off the scary Mind Flayer monster.) Here's to hoping your friends and family will forgive you when you're too exhausted from your all-night binge to take part in those Independence Day festivities. Temi Adebawale was previously an Editorial Assistant at Men's Health, covering shows like Survivor, Peaky Blinders, and Tiger King. Prior to her entertainment work at MH, she was Newsroom Fellow, writing news stories across Hearst Digital Media's brands. Temi likes Rihanna, the StairMaster, and tacos. I believe, in everyone's kitchen, there is a collection of seasonings and flavoring agents that one leans on quite heavily. I'm not talking about salt—which, for me, is another discussion entirely. I'm talking about the other shakers and bottles, the ones that are used so often they never make it back into a cabinet. I have begun keeping mine in a little blue basket right beside my stove so that they are never too far out of reach. Let me show them to you. I know I said salt was “another discussion entirely,” but garlic salt kind of straddles the salt/seasoning divide. My fondness for garlic salt dates back to childhood. Besides pepper, I think it was the only seasoning my grandmother used with any regularity. Her pot roast? Chuck with a can of condensed mushroom soup and garlic salt. Her “garlic bread”? White sandwich bread with butter and garlic salt (toasted). It really does have the ability to impart a super savory, garlicky deliciousness to anything and everything you sprinkle it on. It packs so much flavor, it almost feels like cheating.Friend to omnivores and vegans alike, nutritional yeast is known for bringing a “cheesy,” savory flavor without the presence of actual cheese—though I've always thought of it as a little funkier and nuttier than shaker parm. It is iconically good on popcorn, but I have been known to mix it into mashed potatoes and gravy (both vegetarian and not). I've also been known to eat it by itself with a little salt mixed in, but that can make one's tongue feel kind of weird.Hello panda, my old friend. If you read this blog with any regularity, you know I love this little guy very much. I add MSG to my french fries, my breakfast sausage, my chicken nuggets, my dirty martinis, my caramel sauce, even my dang Thanksgiving turkey. It is a good and purely savory ingredient that brings the umami only glutamate (and its salt) can bring, and there's no reason to fear it.Speaking of breakfast sausage, white pepper is use when grinding my own. It's still peppery, of course, but it's a little fruitier, a little funkier, and a little softer than the black stuff. It's a nice morning-time pepper, really. Try it on some eggs, in a savory oatmeal or in your breakfast ramen. It's also very good in a fried chicken situation, if that is the kind of situation you like to find yourself in.I do not, of course, have anything against a mixed peppercorn scenario, particularly if the peppercorns are freshly ground. A flurry of fresh pepper makes dishes feel finished; even something as simple as a bowl of potato chips benefits from the berries' intensely aromatic and mildly aggressive oils.Hot honey is not a seasoning, exactly, but it is a superb finisher. Nothing cuts the salt and fat on a pepperoni pizza quite like hot honey, and it absolutely smashes in vinaigrettes and sauces (both BBQ and marinara). You can buy it in most grocery stores, but it's pretty easy to make yourself. Red pepper flakes may be the easiest way to bring a lot of heat to any given dish, but they also bring a kind of fruity flavor that I quite enjoy. There really isn't anything they're bad on, but it can be easy to overdo it if you're not careful. The earlier you add them to a dish, the more heat they will provide, so sprinkle them on at the end if you're a heat novice. I lean on Tajin for its combination of chili, salt, and lime quite heavily in the summer months, when all I want to eat is bowls of fresh watermelon. It's good on fruit, on charred vegetables, and in all kinds of dips and spreads, but it's really fun on the rim of a Bloody Mary, Michelada or margarita. You can also use it to quick pickle some onions, which I highly recommend.I got these popcorn powders at Reading Terminal Market in Philadelphia last year, and I have been rationing them out ever since. They are (obviously) good on popcorn, but you can sprinkle them on any salty snack with equally dope results. Both are good in mashed potatoes and sour cream-based dips, but the sour cream & onion does very well when mixed into the filling of deviled eggs.Update February 10, 2021: I have since found these in Portland and online.Sesame seeds bring a pleasant, nutty sweetness and delicate crunch to whatever you sprinkle them on, and right now I am sprinkling them on bowls of cold noodles, on rice bowls, on scrambled eggs (often with mirin) and on plain white rice.I bought this namami togarashi somewhat by accident, thinking I was grabbing the shichimi. The two are similar—they both contain chili peppers, Szechuan peppercorns, sesame seeds, ginger and nori—but namami contains a bit more orange peel, which I am super into. This all-purpose seasoning is good on noodles, rice, cooked meats and vegetables, but I cannot stop putting it on popcorn. Then we have these two remarkable products from Trader Joe's. Pre-mixed everything bagel seasoning can be found almost anywhere now, but TJ's was one of the first to popularize it, and I like the fact that theirs includes black sesame seeds. I wrote a whole blog about all the things I put it on but, if nothing else, you simply must use it as a cheeseball coating.The umami seasoning blend doesn't quite read as pure umami, but it's a very nice mixture of thyme, red pepper, onion, mustard, salt and—obviously—mushrooms. It's a fantastic all-purpose seasoning that's particularly good on roasted chickens and roasted potatoes; it's good on anything roasted, really. Good things take time, and that's exactly how we're feeling about the This Is Us Season 5 premiere. Typically, fans get to start watching new episodes in late September. But when the coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic postponed production, the new season was delayed to October 2020. Now, the highly-anticipated premiere is finally here. So what time is This Is Us on tonight, Oct. 27? Here's when to watch the NBC drama this fall. The 'This Is Us' Season 5 premiere release date and time Chrissy Metz as Kate on 'This Is Us' | NBC RELATED: 'This Is Us': Mandy Moore Teases a New Story in the Season 5 Premiere Fans can watch This Is Us Season 5 starting Tuesday, Oct. 27, on NBC. The two-hour premiere — titled “Forty: Part One” and “Forty: Part Two” — will begin airing at 9 p.m. ET, per usual. However, the network extended the time slot for the season 5 opener, and the new episode will end at 11 p.m. ET. Subsequent episodes should start at 9 p.m. ET and end at 10 p.m. ET. As you may know, NBC originally scheduled the This Is Us Season 5 premiere for Tuesday, Nov. 10. However, the season debut was moved up by two weeks. Then recently, creator Dan Fogelman explained the sudden change occurred. The show's team wanted to drop the premiere ahead of the Presidential Election on Nov. 3. “It was really important to me — and to us — to get these episodes on before the election, not because they are political, but because I think they are difficult and they are hopeful,” Fogelman said, per Deadline. “We felt it was important to us to put them on TV now with no agenda other than that. But it also created intense rush.” What to expect in the 'This Is Us' Season 5 premiere RELATED: 'This Is Us': Milo Ventimiglia Says Kevin and Randall's Fight Was 'Soul-Crushing' The last This Is Us finale left plenty of storylines open for season 5. For one, fans will see the aftermath of Kevin (Justin Hartley) and Randall's (Sterling K. Brown) fight. Kevin is also expecting twins with Madison (Caitlin Thompson), and Randall will continue to work on his mental health in therapy. Meanwhile, Kate (Chrissy Metz) and Toby (Chris Sullivan) plan to grow their family through adoption. Viewers will also see whether Rebecca (Mandy Moore) actually went to the Alzheimer's clinical trial in St. Louis, per Randall's request. This Is Us viewers should also expect to see current events in the present-day timeline. Previously, Fogelman confirmed the new season would address the coronavirus pandemic and Black Lives Matter protests. “It felt almost irresponsible not to take on the moment,” Fogelman said, according to Deadline. Then when speaking with The Hollywood Reporter, he confirmed no one from the Pearson family will test positive for coronavirus. But fans will see how the pandemic impacts their lives as a whole.
